You guys are not even going to believe this, our missing rat has been found! During big yard time Mayuko was in the teacher ally when she when she heard this scratching sound. She looked in a big bin and there was Frosteenie looking up at her. For these past few days after we discovered one of our rats was missing, everyone has been in a on dedicated mission to find our missing pet. They have been drawing maps of possible routes that she could have taken, writing up lists of places she was not discovered in so we would know where we already looked, and discovering possible rat tracks that could be evidence proving that Frosteenie had been there. Some kids have also constructed elaborate contraptions that might just entice Frosteenie to come home. After two days had gone by without Frosteenie back home, the kids had started talking about how sad Jelly was without her sister and that she might be alone forever. Just imagine the shrieks and squeals we heard when they came back into the classroom and saw our rats together again.

They are now having conversations about all the places that Frosteenie could have traveled, two days probably wasn't long enough to go to South America.
